Introduction

THE WORK OF AUGUST EDOUART, the brilliant French silhouettist, is well-known to connoisseurs, and it is therefore with no little satisfaction that I am able to present in the accompanying catalogue a complete list of the Silhouettes made by him in the United States during the ten years he spent here. These Silhouettes, both in number and interest, are unique. So large and valuable was the collection that it took many months before the negotiations for their purchase were satisfactorily arranged; and after they were secured a great deal of time had necessarily to be spent in tracing the genealogy of those whose portraits are included, while the mere matter of cataloguing so many names was in itself a work of time and care. A large number of the Silhouettes are signed on the back, not only by the artist but also by the sitter, and many interesting particulars are added, such as name and address of the subject, his or her weight and height, and the date when the portrait was made. The collection numbers 3,600 full length portraits from eight to nine inches in height, together with twenty-five half and three-quarter-lengths. With the exception of ten posthumous pictures—made from description or paintings—all these silhouettes were cut from life.

The history of the making of these American Silhouettes is interesting. Edouart had already achieved considerable fame in England and had been created Silhouettist to the French Royal family when, in 1839, he decided to visit the United States. His popularity had preceded him and when he arrived in New York he had no lack of clients. Members of the aristocracy flocked to his studio and soon everyone of note was being silhouetted by "the incomparable Edouart." From New York Edouart went to Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and in fact every city of any importance in the Union. Altogether Edouart spent ten years in the United States, during which time he made between three and four thousand portraits of well-known Americans with their wives and families. Many of these Silhouettes are in the form of groups, every member of the household being included—the father, mother, children, slaves, dogs, cats, and even the parrot. The portraits are far more life-like than any photographs could possibly be, and even in those days it was felt that Edouart was a consummate artist.

Included in this unique collection are six American Presidents—John Quincy Adams, Martin van Buren, W. H. Harrison (made at the White House), John Tyler, Millard Fillmore and Franklin Pierce. The politicians—of which there are hundreds—include Daniel Webster and Henry Clay. Among the army men—all in full dress—are Commanders-in-Chief Wingate and Macomb. The financiers and capitalists—household names even to-day—include August Belmont, Samuel Morgan, the Ogdens, the Posts, Buels, Appletons and hundreds of others. Among other professions represented are lawyers, senators, presidents of banks and universities (Josiah Quincey of Harvard being perhaps the most noted among the educational lights), doctors, professors, ministers and literary people, including Longfellow, Miss Sedgwick, and Prescott, the historian. The journalists and actors are also numerous.

Edouart cut every silhouette in duplicate. One copy was purchased by the sitter while the other, carefully inscribed, was kept by the artist for reference and exhibition purposes. In other words Edouart was a good business man, methodical and painstaking, and he kept the duplicate of every silhouette much in the same way as a photographer of to-day keeps the negatives of his portraits.

During the years that Edouart was in the United States making this vast number of silhouettes, he was hospitably entertained wherever he went, and on his return to England he always spoke with the greatest admiration and affection of America and the Americans. Unfortunately his passage back to his own country was not quite so happy an event as it might have been. In 1849 he sailed on the Oneida, together with twenty-five other passengers and a cargo of cotton, from Maryland. On the 19th December, when nearing the coast of Guernsey, a terrific storm arose, the vessel became unmanageable and was wrecked, most of the baggage and cargo going to the bottom. Edouart's case containing the American collection of silhouettes and many English, Scottish and Irish folios, was saved and brought ashore. Edouart managed to get to land and was taken to the house of a man called Lukis who treated his guest most hospitably and persuaded him to remain at his house for some days. Frederica Lukis, the daughter of his host, was equally kind and hospitable and when he was leaving, Edouart presented to her his entire collection of silhouettes which had been so miraculously saved. From the grandson of Frederica Lukis the collection was purchased by Mrs. F. Nevill Jackson, of London, from whom in turn it passed to its present owner. Edouart died soon after his return to England, and it is rather a curious fact that the last silhouettes he ever made were done in America. After his fearful experience on the Oneida his hand apparently lost its cunning and he never again practised his profession.

It may not be out of place here to quote a few paragraphs from the present writer's brochure on "The Silhouette," dealing with August Edouart, and which was published last year. August Amanat Constance Fidèle Edouart—to give him his full name—was born at Dunkerque in 1788 and made his way to London as a refugee in 1815. He had served under Napoleon and been decorated, but tiring of a soldier's life, he settled in England where he married Emilie Lawrence Vitae. One of his sons, the Rev. Augustus Gaspard Edouart, became vicar of Leominster, England.

It was the purest accident which made Edouart a professional silhouette cutter. Here is the story: Some time during 1825 he was spending an evening with some friends, when he was shown two or three profile portraits made by a machine. They were supposed to be likenesses of members of the family he was visiting, and the subjects themselves considered them excellent. Edouart, however, said they were little less than libelous, whereupon one of the daughters of his host begged him to do something better. Without hesitation he seized a pair of scissors and the cover of a letter, put the father in position, and "in an instant I produced a likeness." The paper, of course, was white, but the snuffers soon remedied that. The likeness was perfect. Portraits of other members of the family were made with similar facility and exactness, and Edouart's career as a professional silhouettist began.

Edouart's first patron was the Bishop of Bangor, who paid five shillings for a portrait and afterwards ordered forty additional copies at the same price. Other patrons followed and it soon became the thing to be silhouetted by Edouart. The artist was received everywhere, and on one occasion, at Holyrood Palace, he was presented to Charles X, ex-King of France, whose likeness in paper of four thicknesses he cut in the presence of the Royal Family and suite. Edouart presented one to the little Prince, the Duc de Bordeaux, one to the Prince's sister, one to the Duchesse de Berri, and the fourth to the Duchess d'Angou-lême. Everyone was enthusiastic and declared the likeness to be "most excellent," his Majesty being represented "in his usual mood of thoughtfulness in walking about the room."

Edouart took his art very seriously, and in order to retain a steady hand rose early, dieted himself and eschewed all liquors. He had a wonderful memory for a face, and one of the most remarkable portraits he ever made was that of Daniel O'Connell. Edouart saw the celebrated Irishman once only—in the Chamber of Commerce, Dublin, and then for so short a period that he was unable to make even a hasty sketch. On his return home, however, he cut out the portrait from memory, and the likeness was so wonderful that many believed he had had a sitting from O'Connell.

Of the English silhouettes left behind by Edouart many are finding their way into different museums and galleries. Sir Sidney Colvin, the well-known connoisseur, has so great an admiration for Edouart's technique that on his advice Mr. Homes, Director of the London National Portrait Gallery, has purchased a section of the English silhouettes for the nation. Mr. Caw, Director of the Scottish National Gallery, has done the same for Edinburgh. Mr. Doughty, of Ottawa, has just purchased all the Canadian silhouettes—Edouart made many—for the Archivist Museum at Ottawa, while others will be reproduced in the Official History of the Dominion. Fifty representative examples of Edouart's work were also recently presented to the Victoria and Albert Museum, London, by Mrs. Nevill C. Jackson.

With regard to Edouart's American Silhouettes, the present owner at first thought of offering them en bloc to one of the national museums but on maturer consideration decided that it would interest the greater number if he were to offer them separately so that those who have portraits of their ancestors among the collection might have an opportunity of securing them for preservation in the family archives. Consequently all the Silhouettes in this catalogue will be disposed of individually. Owing to the lack of space the Exhibition will be open for three weeks only, and to all who are interested a very cordial invitation is extended to come and judge for themselves how artistic and graceful a silhouette portrait may be when made by so great an artist as August Edouart.
